

Unusually Personal Vacation Consultants

Romantic getaway. Retirement celebration. Family reunion. Vow renewal. Adventure. Healing. Grieving. Pampering. There are about as many reasons to take a Tropical Living Renewal Vacation as there are tropical islands in the world.

That's why the www.TropicalLiving.com inquiry form is so unusually personal. "Throughout my years of travel, I've seen too many people make the wrong vacation choices," said Alison Tilley, founder and CEO. "I soon realized that people needed different kinds of vacations throughout their lives depending upon the milestones, celebrations or passages they were experiencing."

When Tropical Living vacation clients work with the tropical travel, homeware and lifestyle company, they start the process by filling out a fairly lengthy but insightful "get to know you" document.

"The inquiry form is unusually personal and was specifically designed to help us match our clients with the type of vacation—the island itself and the spa or villa—that hopefully meets their needs," said Tilley. "I don't believe in one-size-fits-all vacations, which is why the inquiry form includes a series of personal clarifying questions. Of course, it is not necessary to answer every question, but the more we know, the better we can assist our clients with their Tropical Living Renewal Vacation."

For example, clients may indicate, "I would like to have a professional health consultation in a tropical setting where I can begin to implement healthier changes into my lifestyle." Or, "I want to support my best friend as she recovers from breast cancer by taking her to a rejuvenating health retreat." Or, "Our last child is packing for college and I'm feeling the empty nest syndrome. I would like our family to have some quality personal time together before they've all flown the coop." Or, "We are non-traditional and want to have a remarkable commitment ceremony that we will always cherish."

Tropical Living considers any and all information shared by their clients as private and highly confidential. It is not passed on or revealed to anyone—not even the clients' family members without written client approval.
